

Congratulatory Message for Science Faculty's 50th Anniversary Celebrations

I take great pleasure in congratulating staff, students and alumni of our Faculty of Science on the happy occasion of its golden jubilee celebration.

While the University has been offering science education to young people from around the globe since its founding in 1956, the Faculty of Science was formally established in 1961. Over the past 50 years, staff and students have jointly built a strong and reputed Faculty through their commitment to outstanding performance in teaching, learning, research and consultancy services.

We are proud of our scientists whose innovative research has gained global recognition and won them international, national and local awards and honours. Our distinguished scholars and students received patents from China, Germany, USA and the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region for their breakthroughs in scientific research and our students have won various academic awards and competitions.

Today, the Faculty of Science with its five departments has a diversity of specialisations and a significant level of funded research. Collaborative programmes and links have been established with teaching and research organisations in the Mainland and overseas. As the Faculty celebrates its 50th anniversary and embarks on a new chapter in its history, may it scale new heights in science education and innovative research, continue its contribution to the advancement of science and nurture young, aspiring scientists, working towards a better future for mankind and the environment.

I wish members of the Faculty every success in the years to come.
